【Description】

This book contains five research papers, each presenting clear, detailed, and objective interpretations based on dictionaries.

"A Proposed Trial Reading and Translation of Nukata-no-Ōkimi's "Bakugo-enrin-ka"
(額田王の莫囂圓隣歌の試訓と意訳の提案) (Volume 1, Poem 9)
Introduces the concept of logographic–phonographic characters to resolve difficult readings and presents, for the first time, a detailed interpretation consistent with the poem's heading.

"A Proposed Alternative Interpretation of Naka-no-Ōe's Poems on the Three Mountains of Yamato"
(中大兄の大和三山の歌の別解釈の提案) (Volume 1, Poems 13–15)
By reading "Takayama"(in the original text) as "takayama" rather than "kaguyama," the study derives a fully consistent conclusion, resolving issues in the sachu (left-note) and the gender debate.

"A Proposed Alternative Interpretation of the Miwa Mountain Poems by Nukata-no-Ōkimi and Inoe-no-Ōkimi"
(額田王と井戸王の三輪山の歌の別解釈の提案) (Volume 1, Poems 17–19)
Proposes the Miwa-no-nemaro hypothesis to resolve the problems related to the left-note of the waka (concordant poem).

"A Proposed Trial Reading and Interpretation of Prince Takechi's Mimoro Poem"
(高市皇子の三諸の歌の試訓と意訳の提案) (Volume 2, Poem 156)
Presents the first literal reading based on character semantics and resolves difficult readings through the concept of logographic–phonographic characters, offering, for the first time, a detailed interpretation aligned with the poem's heading.

"A Proposed Trial Reading and Interpretation of Empress Jitō's Poems of Moyuruhi and Mukinayama"
(持統天皇の燃火と向南山の歌の試訓と意訳の提案) (Volume 2, Poems 160–161)
Interprets Emperor Tenmu and Prince Kusakabe as clouds over imperial tombs within a Buddhist context of enlightenment, presenting, for the first time, a detailed interpretation consistent with the poem's heading.
